

Gains

Along with the setbacks, gains also were made. A noted black sociologist, Dr. Henry Bullock, was appointed to teach a new Negro history course the following spring. KLRN, the Austin and San Antonio public television station, became the first local station to hire a black news announcer. Two new academic programs were started in Black studies. George Washington, one of the first black graduates of the UT School of Law and a teaching assistant in the history department taught an American Studies course on Negro culture; and a 10-part public lecture series on Negro history began, with different guest experts from across the U.S. Project Info was started to attract black and other minority youths to UT.
